CREATE A CHARACTER

Creating a character when you're writing a book, short story, or screenplay can be fun and exciting! Sometimes, making characters from scratch is hard. The one thing that virtually every single book, play, movie, novel, and game has in common is that they all have at least one character. Most have two or more, and some—a cast of hundreds! A monologue only needs one character, as only one person is talking.

Let's start with creating your character.

this or that?

Circle the word that is most suited to your character...

LEADER / FOLLOWER → Do they take charge in any situation or do they follow what others do or tell them to do?

HONEST / DISHONEST → Do they always tell the truth or do they lie?

INTROVERT / EXTROVERT → Introverts focus inward, into their own thoughts, and extroverts focus outward, into the world. Introverts sometimes avoid large groups of people, feeling more energised by time alone. The opposite of an introvert is an extrovert, who finds energy in interactions with others.

LAIK BACK / TEMPERAMENTAL → Are they a relaxed character who doesn't let much bother or worry them or does their mood often change very suddenly depending on the situation

OPTIMISTIC / PESSIMISTIC → Do they have a positive outlook on life and the belief that the future is full of great things, or do they have a more negative outlook of the future and the belief that things will always be bad
